University of Delhi

Monday, 19 April 2021

3 pm to 4 pm

This lecture will trace the thematic and professional transformation of the discipline of psychology in modern India. It will make an effort to examine the interface of culture and psychology by situating developments in the domains of professional and research activities. It will selectively focus its culturally rooted analysis on the substantive processes and phenomena dealing with self, spirituality, values, intelligence, creativity, emotion, motivation, health and well-being with greater emphasis on contemporary trends. The lecture intends to show that culture as an open system of meaning and practices allows for adaptation and constant reorganization according to the given context.
